Historical Sketch:

As of today, the Kansas City Association of Black Journalists is owned by the National Association of Black Journalists in Washington, D.C. The newspaper has also been able to secure a larger readership base by transitioning towards an electronic version, broadcasting on social media, and by continuing to print newspapers locally. Like all newspapers within the United States, KCABJ has had to adapt with non-stop change. The newspaper is still in circulation and can be found on the internet.

Scope and Content Note:

The collection contains full newspapers between 1997-2005 and are all in good condition.
