

Nation of Islam Collection (AC129)

Introduction:

The Nation of Islam Collection contains materials related to the Nation of Islam, a Black Nationalist religious movement, founded by Wallace Fard Muhammad in 1930. The Nation of Islam's religious beliefs and practices draw from Christianity and Islam; however, it is considered heretical by orthodox Muslims. This collection also contains documents related to the United Nation of Islam, a splinter group headquartered in Kansas City, KS, formed in 1978.

Original Language Statement:

The Black Archives of Mid-America follows the widespread practice of using the language provided by speakers and writers of historical documents. Using the speaker's or writer's language can be highly informative and provide pivotal contextual information about cultural and societal customs of previous time periods. As a result, researchers may encounter descriptive language, which often includes verbiage that contains obvious bias, or outdated and stereotypical terminology, and/ or content. Contemporary readers and researchers might find this language harmful or offensive.

Historical Sketch:Nation of Islam, 1930-Present-

The Nation of Islam (NOI) was founded by Wallace D. Fard Muhammad in Detroit, MI, in 1930. Even though he established the first NOI temple (or mosque) in 1931, Wallace "disappeared" (died) in 1934. Elijah Muhammad, Wallace's second in command, took over as leader of NOI after Wallace. The Nation of Islam grew in national prominence during the 1950s and 1960s. By 1955, the organization had grown from four temples to fifteen. Two of its most famous members at that time were Malcolm X and Muhammad Ali.

After Elijah's death in 1975, his son Warith Deen Mohammed, also known as W.D. Mohammed, took the reins. He was drawn towards orthodox Sunni Islam and changed the name from the Nation of Islam to World Community of al-Islam in the West, then changed the name again in 1978 to the American Muslim Mission, moving away from their more radical teachings. He retired in 1985 and dissolved the group. Warith died in 2008.

While most of the group's members continued to follow their leader and turned to follow orthodox Islam, some disagreed. John Muhammad, Elijah Muhammad's brother and Warith's uncle, and Silis Muhammad each formed their own organization in the wake of the dissolution; both were called the Nation of Islam. These groups continued to follow the teachings of Elijah Muhammad. In 1978, Louis Farrakhan, who had joined NOI in the 1950s and become leader of the New York Temple after Malcolm X's assassination, also formed his own group called the Nation of Islam, which continued to follow the teachings of Elijah Muhammad. Farrakhan was able to reestablish his version of the Nation of Islam as a national movement. In 1979, he founded the Final Call newspaper, and in the 1990s, he expanded the organization on an international level. Yet, he, too, eventually led the group to become more orthodox in 2000, after surviving a brush with prostate cancer.

The NOI drew some of its beliefs from Christianity and many more from Islam; however, its Afrocentrism sets it apart. Members of the Nation of Islam acknowledge God as Allah and Muhammad as a Prophet; however, it also teaches that the NOI leaders are divine prophets. Like orthodox Islam, members of the NOI avoid drugs, alcohol, and pork. Additionally, NOI spiritual lore teaches that the first humans were Black and includes the story of Yakub, an evil Black scientist who created the white “race” 6,000 years ago.

The Nation of Islam has been labeled a Black nationalist hate group by the Southern Poverty Law Center, which tracks hate groups nationwide, and the Anti-Defamation League, founded in 1913 to stop the defamation of Jewish people, for being homophobic, antisemitic, and having connections to white supremacist groups despite the fact that Nation of Islam’s anti-white ideology.

Royall Jenkins, a member of the Nation of Islam during Elijah Muhammad’s leadership, formed the United Nation of Islam (UNOI) in Maryland in 1978 in response to the doctrinal changes instituted by Warith Mohammed. Unlike his predecessor, Elijah, Jenkins also claimed to be Allah incarnate and was often referred to as Solomon. The United Nation of Islam had temples and businesses in multiple states, including New York, New Jersey, Ohio, and North Carolina. Royall Jenkins moved to Kansas City, KS, in 1996, and the UNOI headquarters moved to KCK soon after. The organization owned and operated multiple businesses on or near Quindaro Boulevard for twenty years, including a diner, bakery, and gas station. The members of UNOI from across America sent their children to UNOI’s school in KCK. During this time, the organization received multiple accusations of abuse, including human trafficking and physical abuse; however, it was only after Jenkins died in 2021 that the allegations were investigated. That investigation led to a federal indictment charging eight members of UNOI with a forced labor conspiracy, including the forced labor of minors, from 2000-2012; six of those eight were found guilty in September 2024. Also, after Jenkins' death, the United Nation of Islam changed its name to the Value Creators and then to the Promise Keepers and has since lost its properties and businesses. Due to the multiple allegations of abuse, many people have called the UNOI a cult.
